Don't Dread the Question

“What do you want to be when you grow up?”

This is not a question just for little kids. Adults get asked this question too. And lots of times, no matter how old they are, they don't know the answer.

Because “growing up” is not a matter of age or years. It is a matter of maturity, taking responsibility for yourself and finding a passion in life that can lead to fulfilling work and financial rewards that allow you to live a safe, independent and comfortable life.

Don't dread the question. Having a choice is a luxury and a privilege.

If you don't know what you want to do, how can you figure it out? How are you supposed to know what all your choices are? What can you do to start discovering your passions, talents and interests and how they could apply to getting the job of your dreams?

You might be surprised at how much fun and how rewarding career exploration can be.

Through stimulating activities that you can do with friends, family, classmates or on your own, you can start thinking about your future, your place in the work-a-day world and what you can do to succeed in achieving your career goals.

As a bonus, the skills you sharpen while using this workbook – reading, writing, vocabulary, research, computer, interviewing and presentation skills – will be the same skills you use to find and keep a job in the future!
